*"Among the truly significant books of these times" **

THE NEW ORDEAL OF CHRISTIANITY

by PAUL HUTCHINSON

late editor, The Christian Century

Paul Hutchinson
(1890 - 1956)

* What another great editor says about Dr. Hutchinson's latest book:

Those who were close to Paul Hutchinson tell us that he was preparing more than one book when death struck him down. It may be that he was working on one that would answer some of the questions this one raises, but it succeeds in settling enough to place it among the truly significant books of these times.

Marked by the author's passion for facts, this study is also characterized by his humility, his patience, and his Christian concern. There is genuine optimism, too, a quality that was sometimes missing in his earlier writing.

He has not attempted to describe Christianity's present-day ordeal, except to say that it has the characteristics of both death and life, "since death may be a necessary forerunner of birth." He has centered his inquiry on this question, "What is the relation of the Christian churches to the struggle in which man everywhere finds himself involved?" And he uses the terms "helpless puppet" and "awful tension and conflict."

The book's pattern is arresting: The first two chapters show what the Roman Catholics are doing, as a church on the defensive and on the offensive in many parts of the world. The intellectual offensive, the statistical offensive, the social offensive, the political offensive (focused in unbending opposition to communism) are mentioned, but the author does well to note that the prevailing Italianate character puts the church on the defensive.

The chapter on the Greek Orthodox churches will open the eyes of many readers, especially when the author discusses the relationship of the Orthodox community to the World Council of Churches, and the struggle between Pro- and Anti-Communists in the Orthodox Community. Encyclopedic knowledge is important here, but insights are even more important.

Dr. Hutchinson's penetrating analysis of Protestantism in Europe, Asia and Africa leads to a description and evaluation of the ecumenical movement. He points out the perils, but adds good solid reasons for hope in the fact that "even in this time of troubles, even in these days of darkness and great fear, men can reach out across all barriers to grip the hands of their Christian brothers."

The chapter on American Protestantism is best of all. Amid all the baffling changes in the American social scene there are certain characteristics that do not change — the idea of religious liberty, the unmistakable revival of theological emphasis, and the strengthening of ecumenical interest in many places.

The heart of the book is in this typically Hutchinson belief: "What we need most of all is a new sense of the greatness, the marvel of our gospel and the desperate need of men and nations."

—Dr. T. OTTO NALL in New Christian Advocate
